THE TEXT:

1- My name's Peter Smith. I'm a builder. I left school at the age of 15 because it was boring. I didn't like my teachers because they lived a different world and because they couldn't understand us.
2- Thirty-five years ago George Sempeter and I were classmates in the primary school. We were friends because we liked each other and shared the same experiences. Besides, we were only 5 years old.
3- Today I met George in the milk market after more than thirty years. The thing that surprises me now is my own reaction to meeting him so long. From day to day, I often see men who went to school with me and who did well for themselves. They are now doctors, teachers, lawyers, and one of them is a minister. Sometimes they see me, too but they neglect me. Because I am a failure, whenever I meet one of these people, I always feel embarrassed. With doctor George it was different, because I felt happy when I saw him.
4- Today, he saw me before I saw him. He called me from the other side of the street and when I heard my name I turned to see him smiling. He was healthy and well-dressed. I can't say how pleased I was when he shook my hand and asked how I was. I couldn't answer. My old clothes spoke for themselves. After exchanging some words and because George was in a hurry, we agreed to meet again.
